“It is the role of good journalism to take on powerful abusers, and when powerful abusers are taken on, there’s always a bad reaction. So we see that controversy, and we believe that is a good thing to engage in.” https://www.brainyquote.com/quotes/julian_assange_413753

Whether the United States of America is or is not an ‘abuser’ is perhaps a matter of perspective only. Either way, there is no scope for debate regarding the power of the USA. It continues to be, if only for a matter of years to come, arguably the most powerful nation on the planet. It is understandable then that award-winning ‘journalist’ – and Townsville-born Aussie boy – Julian Assange would ‘take on’ successive governments of Uncle Sam through WikiLeaks, a “multi-national” media organisation and “associated library” that specialises in “...the analysis and publication of large datasets of censored or otherwise restricted

It is unsurprising that Mr Assange appears to be experiencing the inevitable “bad reaction.”

Now serving a prison sentence of 50 weeks in Belmarsh Prison – formerly ‘referred to as Britain’s Guantanamo Bay’ – Mr Assange is also wanted for prosecution in Sweden and the USA, a situation he forestalled for seven years as a (temporary) resident in the Ecuadorean Embassy in London, England until his much publicised arrest by British police in April 2019.

So how did it come to this? And the more bewildering question, how did Mr Assange expect to avoid this very outcome?

Much has been written about and said of Mr Assange, quite a bit by the man himself. In hindsight, Mr Assange may have becoming a public “lightning rod” for WikiLeaks, the organisation he founded in 2006 to “keep government honest.” Leaving that aside, the current situation can be traced back to the ‘publication’ on an unprecedented scale during 2010 and for years thereafter on the WikiLeaks site. Sara Storer

On Saturday 18 May I had the opportunity to see Sara Storer on her 'Raindance' Tour. Sara is an Australian born Mallee girl who now lives in Wagga Wagga with her four boys and husband Dave. Sara's recent album titled 'Raindance' features songs about life in rural Australia. Some favourites being 'My Little Men', 'Hay Runner', and 'Every Boy Needs a Bike'. Sara expresses her storytelling through her songs. The majority of the songs are based on true events. Most of these stories being about farmers and the drought.

For her opening act, we were lucky to hear from Shanley Del and James Gillard. To quote Shanley's words 'We are here to grease the pan for Sara' before Sara and her brother Greg come onstage. The couple sang their originals and had amazing harmonies that made the hair on your arms stand up. After Shanley and James

Fearless

Fearless is a TV series about a lawyer who brings back a cold case. The cold case involves a young girl who was murdered, yet the person in goal didn't commit the murder, but has accepted the situation he is in and will always be in. Yet as the series progresses the lawyer persists, risking her life, her friends and colleagues, as well as her career, but she digs deeper, as the young dead girl's family get involved and question the closure that they had received and also hope that it is true.

The series follows a deep storyline with layers of detail added to add to the mystery of what actually happened.

When researching the show, I stumbled across the casting application page. A few things stood out to a group of 20 hand-picked people. When applying for the show, they ask you for your height, they ask for your cultural background, they ask for the number of followers you have on social media, they ask for your weight. It got me thinking why this show is not called Vanity Island.

Why does reality entertainment mean white skinny bodies or rock hard abs and big muscles for this is what the show entailed. All I see 'Love Island' promoting is a totally misguided message on how your

Jameela Jamil, British female actor and body positivity activist has begun that revolution of change. After seeing an Instagram post of the Kardashians with their weight typed below them, Jameela began something called an “I weigh movement.” This is where people take a photo of themselves and rather

Beyond my physical appearance I strive to be passionate, hard working, fun, an animal lover and more. The point of her movement is to get people thinking, all across the world, about how they see

Overall,

Jameela Jamil has begun the change in body image in society, but it’s just the start.

As a school, we can create change too.

We can change in accepting our bodies and honouring them, we can change by being selective and considerate in our language choices, we can change by giving our peers positive reinforcements, we can change that two word and nine letter phrase into something our society learns to embrace, love and accept.

Bray Fields – Sport Training

We are delighted that we have started to use Bray Fields for senior football and rugby training this week. The stunning sunset on Tuesday at the end of their training session.

The use of Bray Fields is being phased in over the coming months. For Tuesday and Thursday training, all teams must leave from and return to the main campus on foot accompanied by their coaches and they must follow the designated route. There is no pedestrian footpath that
